Stan Zuray's odyssey: from an unsettled Dot boyhood to life along the Yukon River

BY NOBLE INGRAM
SPECIAL TO THE REPORTER

Stan Zuray is a spry, white-haired man in his late sixties. He's a fast talker with a thick accent picked up during his childhood in Adams Village in the 1950s and 1960s. When he speaks about the places he has been since leaving Boston 40 years ago—about “Canader” and the “Noth Woods”—the sounds of his hometown legacy inevitably filter through.

These days, Zuray's home is a tiny village called Tanana on the Yukon River in Alaska, some 4,500 miles from Dot Ave, and 60 miles from the Arctic Circle. He's the star of the Discovery Channel's hit reality show, “Yukon Men,” which spotlights the struggles of an isolated town trying to make a living off the land. Zuray's neighbors and co-stars are a hardscrabble clan of mountain men and women, and even among them, he is something of a revered figure. He has trapped wolves, hunted moose, and survived more than one run-in with a grizzly. In addition, he held for years the record for the fastest time by an amateur in the famed Iditarod dog sled race. But unlike nearly everyone else in the village, Zuray wasn't born into this world; he found it after seeking refuge from a completely different way of life.

New faces eyeing at-large council seats

BY JENNIFER SMITH

Two first-time candidates, both from Dorchester, have thrown their names into the ring for city councillor at-large in this year's municipal election. Aziza Robinson-Goodwin and William A. King say the council could use a fresh perspective as the city booms.

If they follow through on their plans, the challengers, who recently filed statements of organization with the Office of Campaign and Political Finance, would be running against four at-large incumbents, Ayanna Pressley, Michael Flaherty, Michelle Wu, and Annissa Essaibi-George.

Aziza Robinson-Goodwin

Robinson-Goodwin grew up splitting time between her two-family home on Upland Avenue and an apartment in the old Chickering Piano Factory near the South End/Roxbury line. “I'm three generations in, in this city,” the 33-year-old said in a phone interview on Tuesday, “so

William A. King

I actually get the landscape of the city. I've seen the beauty and the problems.”

Development, gentrification, and youth employment resources are at the top of her mind at this point. With a two-year-old daughter, she is also thinking ahead about the city's educational resources.

Robinson-Goodwin points to her creative and service credentials as the backbone of her run. “Preserving cultural assets is important to understanding history, which empowers us as people to want to be engaged,” she said.

Walsh rolls out $3.14b budget for operations

Investments itemized for schools, safety, and the neighborhoods

BY JENNIFER SMITH
REPORTER STAFF

Mayor Martin Walsh on Wednesday proposed a $3.14 billion city operating budget for Fiscal Year 2018, a 4.8 percent, or $143.7 million, jump over last year. Walsh says the budget would more fully support Boston's neighborhoods and increase investments in areas like education, homelessness resources, and broader city services.

“I am proud to put forth a budget that makes strategic investments to support Boston's neighborhoods, and builds on our strong record of fiscal management,” Walsh said in a statement. “This proposal represents a smart, responsible, and sustainable fiscal strategy that is forward-looking and will achieve maximum impact by investing in our people. Together, we will continue to put the City of Boston in the very best possible position to thrive this coming year, and in the years ahead.”

The mayor touted his $1.061 billion Boston Public Schools budget—approved by the Boston School Committee and to be considered by the City Council—and said it's likely to increase by another $20 million after collective bargaining.

Up about $2 million in the proposed budget, the Boston Public Health Commission would receive $79.08 million in FY18. Some of that increase would “ensure that the city's homeless shelters continue to operate 24/7,” according to

T makes first stop on trolley study tour

BY JENNIFER SMITH
REPORTER STAFF

Transit officials began the first leg of a community outreach process on the future of the Mattapan High-Speed Trolley on Tuesday by briefing a modest gathering in the Mattapan branch of the Boston Public Library.

With $7.9 million allocated to keeping the 10-car fleet of WWII-era Presidents' Conference Committee (PCC) trolleys maintained and functioning, the engineering firm CH2M Hill, Ltd. is now engaged in a $1.1 million, year-long “due diligence” study of the 2.6-mile line's current conditions.

The baseline investment will preserve the cars “into the 2020s,” said Brian Kane, the MBTA's director of operations analysis. “There are many things we are considering for the future of the line, but we are also committed to keeping the PCC car fleet on the Mattapan high speed line into the next decade,” he said. “As old as they are, there are no guarantees with these cars, but there's also no expiration date.”

The study will weigh the relative advantages

Volunteers sought for massive Neponset River clean-up on April 29

The annual Neponset River cleanup will be held on Sat., April 29 from 9 a.m.-noon at various sites— and volunteers are now being recruited for the effort. Last year, over 200 people volunteered their time at the cleanup, and collected 6 tons of debris and another 140 bags of trash from the river.

Volunteers are encouraged to pre-register now at neponset.org/volunteer.

The focus of the cleanup will be on three sites along the Neponset River Estuary:

- Granite Ave. Marshes

Hancock St. eatery cited for after-hours fight

An after-hours fight between two managers at the Kriola Restaurant at 33 Hancock St. last month resulted in injuries and a written violation, Boston Police said. Officers were called to the bar and restaurant just after 12:30 a.m. on March 21, according to C-11 commander Capt. Time Connolly.

“The owners were uncooperative and less than accurate when officers arrived,” Connolly said. A physical altercation broke out over cleaning the floors, according to the police report. When a female employee stepped in to intervene, she was pushed aside and injured her face, police said. One of the managers was bleeding from the fight, Connolly said. No arrests were made.

The eatery— which was approved for a beer and wine license last October over the concerns of some neighbors— will appear before the Licensing Board in the coming weeks. Connolly said Boston Police will be on hand to testify.

Boston Police are seeking help in identifying a “person of interest” related to a shooting on March 8 on Quincy Street. The victim— an adult male—survived the attack, which took place around 3:55 p.m. in the area of 225 Quincy St.

District B-2 detectives have released a video of a person they want to speak with about the incident, stressing that “the individual pictured... is NOT wanted at this time.”

One Boston Day will be observed on April 15

One Boston Day will be observed in the city next Saturday, 15— the fourth anniversary of the bombings that killed three and maimed scores of spectators and runners at the Boston Marathon in 2013. The annual commemoration was declared in 2015.

In Dorchester, home to the Richard family which lost their son and brother Martin, 8, hundreds of volunteers are expected to spend the day cleaning up sites across the neighborhood.

In a statement on its website, the Martin

Richard Foundation announced: “Inspired by Martin’s love of neighborhood clean-up day with the Ashmont-Adams Neighborhood Association, the Martin Richard Foundation will hold our annual community-wide One Boston Day of Service along Dorchester Avenue from 11 a.m.-2 p.m. Additional project sites include meaningful locations such as the Boys and Girls Club of Dorchester, Ryan Playground, Savin Hill Beach and the Mather School.

“Our afternoon of service will conclude with a Moment of Silence at 2:49 p.m. around the Peabody Square clock to remember Martin, Lingzi Lu, Krystle Campbell, Sean Collier and Dennis Simmonds. We will close the afternoon in gratitude and appreciation for our neighbors, friends and supporters with refreshments and treats on the T Plaza. All are welcome to attend.”

Volunteers can sign up online at teammr8.org/onebostonday. All children under 12 years old should be accompanied by an adult or older family member.

Public, Catholic, private schools join up in teacher collaborative

By JENNIFER SMITH
REPORTER STAFF

Boston educators are welcoming a new program to help teachers share best practices across public, charter, and Catholic schools, officials announced Tuesday.

The Boston Educators Collaborative, established in partnership with the Boston Compact and Teach Plus, will use a peer-to-peer model of professional development. Selected teachers will lead free 5-week, 15-hour courses through UMass Boston, and the participants will then return to their home schools to share what they have learned with their colleagues.

Mayor Martin Walsh and education leaders in the city announced the collaborative at the Mission Church Grammar School in Roxbury, a 127-year-old Catholic school serving students from pre-kindergarten to grade 8.

Pooling resources across schools stands to benefit teachers and students throughout the city, Walsh said at a press conference following a tour of the Mission Hill school.

"We get caught up a lot in conversation about what schools... and who's in what camp," he said. "I'm the mayor of Boston. I'm the mayor of all 75,000 school-age kids. I went to kindergarten in a Boston public school, I went to grammar school at the St. Margaret Grammar School, I went to Union Park High School, and I'm a founding board member of a charter school, so I guess if you ask me which education I like, I've experienced them all first hand and they're all great."

Walsh was joined by Boston Public Schools Superintendent Tommy Chang and other city education officials, representatives from the Boston Charter Alliance, the archdiocesan schools, Teach Plus, and the Boston Compact.

Chang said that educator collaboration helps individual schools improve strategies, increase academic rigor, and narrow opportunity and achievement gaps. "This is truly peer-to-peer work," he said. "I'm a big believer in the best way to learn is to learn from your peers."

Participants will be able to choose from six courses that will begin in May and be held on weekday evenings at Codman Academy, Mission Grammar School, and the Curley K-8 School. Topics include "Culturally Responsive Teaching: How Does Culture Play a Role in Learning?" and "Anything But Standard: Creative Ways to Engage Students in CCSS Writing."

The individual classes are geared toward segments or the entirety of the K-12 system, with some focusing on earlier education and others – like "Literature Circles 101: Teaching Students to Read Like Adults" – pinpointing older middle and high school students. Additional courses will be offered throughout 2017 and 2018, officials said, with registration open for the first six courses at teachplus.org/BEC-registration.

The teachers who will lead the courses are designated as adjunct professors with UMass Boston and will earn a stipend. Attending teachers will receive credit for participating in the

Sharing knowledge and resources between school types in the past has eased issues like transportation across the school district and opened conversations on how best to support black and Latino boys in school, educators said on Tuesday.

"So this collaborative, the Boston Educators Collaborative, is a new endeavor, but collaboration across the sectors is not new," said Shannah Varón, executive director at the Boston Collegiate Charter School and chair of the Boston Charter Alliance. "This collaborative of educators will continue the work we've begun and enhance the benefits that we've started, because we all know our students are our number one priority and our teachers are our number one asset."

Walsh team rolls out $3.14b 'reality' budget for operations

(Continued from page 1) the statement. Veterans assistance programs would also get a boost, including an increase of $150,000 in general funds to provide support services for veterans not eligible for veterans' affairs programs, as well as $50,000 in federal funds to provide down payment assistance to veterans.

The Environment, Energy and Open Space Cabinet would see a 2.3 increase in FY18, including a 12.8 increase in the Environment Department's budget, a decrease of 1.6 percent in the Inspectional Services Department portfolio, and a 4.7 percent increase for the Parks and Recreation Department. The mayor's budget invests in a rotation of small renovations to neighborhood ball fields to keep them safe and playable, according to the announcement.

Dave Sweeney, the city's chief financial officer, said the budget "reflects reality" with local revenue sources are growing by 5.5 percent. That growth is offset, he notes, by state aid growth of 2.5 percent, which still leaves overall state aid below 2008 levels.

Boston's revenue stream is already disproportionately dependent on property taxes, a trend that continues into FY18. Property tax accounts for 69.7 percent of the overall revenue – the net levy has risen by $110.7 million this year – a slight uptick from 69.6 percent in FY17. Expenditures are increasing accordingly, with appropriations rising by $94.1 million (4 percent) and fixed costs by $49.6 million (8 percent).

"When you think about where we are as a city, for the last three years we've benefitted from a very strong economy," Walsh said. This budget rides the line between allocating the resources that come along with a boom time and also readying for the future, he said.

"We're spending responsibly," the mayor added, "but we're also preparing for the inevitable, where there will be a downturn in the economy."

City officials highlighted cost-saving measures, including overtime reform, eliminating long-term vacant positions, energy efficiency improvements, which will account for about $60 million in savings. This proposal is a balanced budget, Sweeney said, though adjustments are likely to occur through the budgetary process. "But, he added, "only because of the city's diligence in finding ways to reduce its costs are we able to continue to make new investments across city departments, in particular in this budget at BPS, and the public safety departments," he said.

The city's operating budget and capital budget are being released separately this year, with detail on local investments expected with the upcoming rollout of the capital budget.

T makes its first stop on Mattapan trolley study tour

(Continued from page 1) of maintaining or enhancing the current stock – of which seven cars are regularly in service; investing in replica trolleys or other light rail alternatives; creating a Bus Rapid Transit route with additional connections; and alternative vehicle technologies like all-electric trams.

Attendees emphasized that the trolley is an historic part of the neighborhood.

“I see the Mattapan line as a great asset to the city of Boston and the MBTA,” said resident Carole Mooney. “It goes along a historic route, and it goes through historic cemetery, there is a walking trail along the way, and you can get on it from most of the stops.”

She recommended that the T focus on advertising the line, perhaps adding bicycling connections along the Neponset River Greenway Extension, which is expected to be completed this year. “This is a real gem,” Mooney said. “Our chance is to keep this as the people many years ago decided to keep Faneuil Hall, as they kept the old State House, as they kept our historic churches. It’s a very important thing for us to keep this, not only for ourselves but for the city and for the state.”

State Rep. Dan Cullinane said that the value of the trolley goes beyond nostalgia or historic preservation. Those who depend on the line are disproportionately transit burdened, he said. Mattapan contains the lowest percentage of commuters in the city by neighborhood whose commute is less than 30 minutes, and the highest percentage of commuters whose commute is more than 60 minutes – a 10 percentage point jump over the next closest neighborhood.

“As I have said before regarding public transportation: Access to opportunity is everything,” Cullinane wrote in a statement. “If you can’t get there, or if it takes too long to get there, then that access is not real.”

State Sen. Linda Dorcea Forry, state Rep. Russell Holmes, state Rep. Bill Driscoll of Milton, and representatives from city councillors Andrea Campbell’s and Annissa Essaibi-George’s offices also attended the meeting.

City Councillor Tim McCarthy, whose district includes the Mattapan end point of the trolley, talked about traveling with fellow councillor Frank Baker to Philadelphia in 2016 to examine the city’s comparable vintage PCC fleet. Workers there, he said, mentioned that “there’s a fine line between a modern trolleys and the quaintness and uniqueness of what we have here.”

McCarthy also reminded T officials to bear in mind potential impacts on homeownership values and appeal along the line. “We’re looking at major development around the Mattapan Square area,” he said. “And the thought of having homeownership in the Mattapan parking lot there at some point... there’s a lot different between watching a trolley rolling by and a bus revving as it drives by your house.”

Attendees pointed out areas in need of improvement, including limited disability accessibility, jammed cars during peak hours, and very infrequent service during off-peak hours. And transit advocate Allentza Michel asked if any thought was being given to retrofitting the cars with ADA-accessible interiors while maintaining the historic shell.

“Because the look of the car is really what gives it its value as a tourist attraction,” she said, “in San Francisco and Brownsville, Pennsylvania, those are the things they really use to market the cars, and so think about this as a potential tourist attraction, as a potential revenue-generating opportunity for the local neighborhoods.”

Kane said that the technical analysis for the study needs to come before any detailed plans are laid out for the future of the cars, including possible retrofits. “This due diligence study really is the first step to anything that comes next,” he said.

Additional meetings are planned for Milton High School on April 13 from 6:30 p.m. to 8:30 p.m., and the Lower Mills Public Library on April 24, also from 6:30 to 8:30. The T is also soliciting feedback through the Mattapan Trolley section of its website, MBTA.com.

New faces eyeing at-large council seats

Currently chair of the Frederick Douglass Sculpture Project, she has worked as the artist in transit for the Fairmount Cultural Corridor Initiative and served for four years on the executive board of the Boston branch of the NAACP, running the group’s Afro-Academic, Cultural, Technological and Scientific Olympics (ACT-SO) youth program.

“It’s time for a new voice to be heard,” she said. “And we’ve seen the arts be a vehicle to transform ways that are just set in stone. We talk about being an innovative city, so we need some real creative, innovative minds on the council.”

The other new face to the race, King, 27, has always called Dorchester home, living near Franklin Park along American Legion Highway. He told the Reporter on Tuesday that he decided to run to “bring a unique perspective to the council, being a young, biracial male born and raised in Dorchester.” Seeking elected office, he said, seems the best route to effect a positive change for his community.

He is a product of the Boston public schools and has worked in the technology department at TechBoston Academy in the Codman Square area for five years. Now working in IT for a real estate development firm, King said his time at TechBoston helped build an additional connection with the young people making their way through the public school system.

Boston schools could use reform, King said. He floated the idea of a longer school day that would be more in line with parents’ work schedules and added: “I think trade programs would be a good idea, so that students don’t just graduate with a diploma, they also graduate with certificate in a specific field, giving kids the skills to succeed after high school.”

Municipal election nomination papers can be pulled between April 19 and May 15; at-large council candidates need to secure 1,500 certified signatures by the filing deadline, May 23.

adult children, settled into a chair at the Sugar Bowl coffee shop on Dot Ave recently and recalled the Dorchester of his childhood as a poor but tight-knit community. People tied clotheslines to telephone poles and chatted with friends on sidewalks.

“You knew everybody on the street... You can see that now, but not to the extent that it was back then when I was growing up,” he said. Despite the rich community-support system, the Zuray family struggled through the harsher realities of working-class life. As a kid he hoarded money, moving his mother to say, “You give Stanley a nickel, he’ll turn it into a quarter.”

But Zuray puts a different twist on his collecting: He had no interest in spending what he had saved. When those quarters piled up high enough, he would toss them all into the sewer.

“It took me a while to understand it,” he said. “My father worked with the fire department as a blacksmith... He would work at the tire shop in the evenings on Friday nights and Saturdays and then he would also work as a cab dispatcher and he’d sleep a lot so he was never [expletive] home... He was gone so much and I think I blamed it on money. On the quest for money.”

That hunger for financial security has left a deep impact on Zuray. Being poor in 1950s Dorchester meant constantly feeling the pressure to make ends meet — a pressure that often fractured families. He said he “always thought, ‘Boy wouldn’t it be nice if you lived on a farm or something and you could raise your kids and work with [them], and when they got old enough they could go get their own farm... But you’re with your kids in your work.’”

As he got older, he saw crime creep into the neighborhood. Under-stimulated kids with nothing better to do, he said, started stealing cars or selling drugs to make cash on the side. Zuray wouldn’t say explicitly how he was involved but he conceded that he “did some things [he] wasn’t proud of” during this time.

And those who weren’t breaking the law were headed in what Zuray saw as an equally unappealing direction — into the workforce and the daily grind.

“This is why I left. I had some friends who were dying and anybody that held it together at all was getting married or got a job at the bank or an insurance company because now they’re young men, they’re expected to go to work... and it became to the point where I just described it as an extremely lonely place to be. Boston was very lonely. I used to wander around Downtown by myself — I wouldn’t even be with my friends.”

With no interest in taking up a 9-to-5 job, and weary of how pervasive drug abuse had become among his friends,

Zuray set out for uncharted territory. His route to Alaska was a winding way, with stops in a hippie commune in Vermont, in a camp in Canyon California, and a community of Americans living illegally in British Columbia, Canada. After a near miss with Canadian immigration officers, Zuray moved back onto American soil and purchased some open federal homestead land in central Alaska.

Tanana was the X on Zuray’s map. The small town has a few families, their sled dogs, and the occasional rogue wolf. For almost its entire history, not a single road reached Tanana, which meant that locals maintained a subsistence lifestyle of hunting, trapping, and fishing without much competition from commercial industries or tourists. For Zuray, that isolation from outsiders, particularly those from down in the lower 48, was a huge draw.

“You don’t have to go far in the woods to be completely away from civilization... Somebody can go to Yellowstone Park, somebody can go to some valley... but you’d have to hide out and never see people,” he said, “I don’t want to do that. I don’t want to be hiding. I want to be out somewhere where you’re free.”

For all that, Zuray’s need for separation from the outside hasn’t kept him from connecting with the show’s fan base. He’s got a book coming out soon, recounting in detail his journey from Adams Corner to the Yukon Valley. He’s done Youtube Q + A videos about his gun collection and the best technique for storing moose meat. He has answered questions for a Reddit “Ask Me Anything” special and just last week rung the NASDAQ opening bell in New York City.

When he stopped at a coffee shop on Dorchester Avenue recently, the owner asked Zuray what was so familiar about him.

“Well, actually you know me from the TV,” he replied with a chuckle.

Still, it’s sharing the Tanana way of life that makes the show — and all the publicity that comes with it — worth it for Zuray. His freedom from civilized society, not his growing celebrity, is what makes him content. When people ask him if he has ever considered leaving the village, Zuray says with a smile that he has thought about it once or twice.

“I have wondered what Siberia would be like.”

Live jazz quartet concert at All Saints on April 20

By REPORTER STAFF
Noted jazz trumpet player Jason Palmer will bring his quartet to Peabody Hall at the Parish of All Saints on Ashmont Street for a performance on Thursday, April 20 at 7p.m. He'll be joined by Max Light on guitar, Jared Henderson on bass and Lee Fish on drums. This Dorchester appearance is co-sponsored by Greater Ashmont Main Streets and the Mandorla Music Series.

Tickets, $15, include a dessert reception featuring items from a local bakery, and are available at mandorlamusic.net. Tickets will also be available at the door. Originally from Rocky Point, North Carolina, Palmer has called Boston home for many years, since first coming to study at the New England Conservatory. He has become one of the most in-demand jazz trumpet players of his generation, performing with jazz legends like Roxbury native Roy Haynes, Herbie Hancock and Jimmy Smith, and top modern players like Greg Osby and Ravi Coltrane. Palmer was a recipient of the 2014 French American Cultural Exchange Jazz Fellowship and was named a 2011 Fellow in Music Composition by the Massachusetts Cultural Council. Palmer took first place in the 2009 Carmine Caruso International Jazz Trumpet Solo Competition and

as one of the "Top 25 Trumpeters of the Future." When he's at home in Boston, he leads the weekend house band at the legendary Wally's Cafe, and presently teaches at Berklee College of Music and Harvard University. This will be his first live show in Dorchester.

"Boston has a rich jazz history and a very exciting scene today," said Mandorla Music Series producer Mark Redmond. "There aren't enough opportunities to experience live jazz in Boston's neighborhoods and most that exist are in bars and restaurants. Peabody Hall is known as a great listening room for chamber music and it will be a great room for jazz."

Attorney General Maura Healey and the Massachusetts Office for Victim Assistance (MOVA) honored state Sen. Linda Dorcena Forry with this year's Legislator of the Year Award. "Her career-long commitment to promoting sound public health, safety, economic, social justice reforms have and continue to make a real impact in the lives of crime victims throughout the state," said Liam Lowney, MOVA's Executive Director. "We are thrilled to honor a true champion of victim rights and services and congratulate the Senator on receiving this year's award."

Dot woman helps raise awareness about 'silent killer'

Peggie O'Neil-Mirabile was working at Dorchester's Murphy School in 2011 when she was struck in the head by one of her students. The injury turned out to be a blessing in disguise as it inadvertently led to the discovery of two brain aneurysms at age 47.

"It's like a silent killer," said Mirabile, who said the condition is often hereditary. "The easiest way to describe an aneurysm is like a balloon. The balloon keeps blowing up until one side gets weak and then pops, and that's what an aneurysm is. It's weakness in a blood vessel."

Mirabile is raising funds for the 16th annual Arterial Challenge at Fenway Park on Sun., April 9. This is her second time participating in the aneurysm awareness walk as part of Team Rockstar, which boasts 42 participants and has raised over $3,000 for The Brain Aneurysm Foundation. Mirabile is currently the top fundraiser for the team.

Her biggest goal is to raise awareness for aneurysm research and the best way to do that is through fundraising. She will be hosting a fundraising party at Twelve Ben's, a local tavern near Fields Corner on Sunday after the walk at Fenway. There will be plenty of raffle prizes, catered food, and a DJ. Join her and her Peggie O'Neil-Mirabile team members at Twelve Ben's from 12:30-7 p.m. For further information on the BA Foundation and to donate to Peggie O'Neil-Mirabile, visit give.bafound.org.

'People's History' looks to fill in blanks in Dot's annals

BY CLARA HUDSON
REPORTER CORRESPONDENT
Professors from UMass Boston are teaming up with the neighborhood's Historical Society to seek our untold tales of Dorchester people past and present. The new initiative—dubbed "A People's History"—will kick off with an event at the Dorchester Historical Society's headquarters on Boston Street on April 22 from 10 a.m.-12 p.m.

"We want to empower people in being historians themselves," said Jane Becker, PhD, from UMass Boston's History Department. "Understanding how things have gotten to where they are is a crucial part of our human experience."

UMass Boston students have been focused on Dorchester's history in recent months, making a series of presentations — including one that focused on the tumultuous run-up to the desegregation of city schools in the 1960s and 70s; and another on historic preservation in Uphams Corner.

Becker says that the UMass effort intends to create an interactive timeline that will be a jumping off point for the April 22 discussion. Attendees can fill in dates, events, and stories on the timeline that they think are important.

The timeline will highlight "what's not there, and what has never been there," said Becker.

"Missing history" will be found through personal stories about pivotal times in Dorchester's recent past. Key events in the American civil rights movement and immigration are topics that can be further explored — and guests are asked to bring records or genealogical research to the table.

While there is a strong core of longtime residents and academics who attend events by the Dorchester History Initiative, the group is hoping to expand their appeal. They are particularly hoping to attract underrepresented communities of color that can help shine light onto a forgotten past, said Becker.

"We are a history program and an academic program, but we want to make sure that we're inclusive of everybody," said Monica Pelayo, PhD, the Director of the Public History Track and an assistant professor at UMass Boston's History Department.

Pelayo saw the possibility for increased civic engagement from empowering events like this.

"In reality, everyone is a participant in history, and creates history themselves," she said.

configuration of buildings seems to match the 1884 map.

Amos Upham opened the market in the early part of the 19th century, and his family operated the business until the 1890s, when the building was torn down and replaced, first with a one-story masonry building and later with the multi-story brick Columbia Square Building that stands there today.

RIP, Ted Cutler: A most generous son of Dorchester

This week, the city of Boston is mourning the death of a Dorchester boy who made a fortune and then devoted much of his life to an unvarnished form of generous philanthropy to both the city he loved and the grand old neighborhood where he was born and grew up.

Ted Cutler, OFD, passed away last Thursday at the age of 86. A one-time musician and artist's agent, Mr. Cutler made it big when he and three of his Dorchester friends invested in business ventures ranging from corporate travel agencies and trade shows to Las Vegas casinos.

Ted was best known in greater Boston for creating the free Outside the Box music festival. But the Emerson College graduate and Back Bay resident never forgot his Dorchester roots. Two years ago, he returned to the basement of his boyhood school for the unveiling of a sparkling new library that had been constructed by volunteers. He had helped to pay for the renovations and the library was dedicated to him.

Mimi LaCamera, a school volunteer who chaired the effort to build the library, paid tribute this week to the man whose generosity was so helpful: "Ted Cutler was a grand Bostonian with a grand and generous heart," she said in a letter published Tuesday in the Boston Globe. "Ted was also OFD — Originally From Dorchester — roots that he never forgot. He attended the Sarah Greenwood School ... directly across from his grandfather's variety store. Thanks to Ted's generosity and that of others, the Greenwood opened a new library for its first- to eighth-graders in September 2015, a beautiful new facility which was named in honor of Ted.

"He will always be remembered for his grand gestures on behalf of the city he loved. At the Greenwood and in his home neighborhood of Dorchester, he will also be remembered for his smaller gestures, which are no less the hallmarks of his life."

Built in 1919, the 98-year-old school building at the corner of Harvard and Glenway streets offers an extended-day program for some 400 students, K-1 through Grade 8, with dual language instruction in Spanish and English.

On that September morning, LaCamera joined school headmaster Alexander Mathews and his staff in unveiling a plaque dedicating the library to Mr. Cutler, one of the oldest graduates of the school. "Teddy represents the past of the school, the present, and the future," she said.

Tributes from the governor, the mayor

"Over the course of the past 25 years or so, Ted and his wife, Joan, were hugely philanthropic. It adds up to many tens of millions of dollars in philanthropy: human services, education, arts, and health care," Gov. Charlie Baker told the Globe for Mr. Cutler's obituary, adding "it's a shame his very gentlemanly and old-fashioned manner and kindness won't be with us anymore. My wife said one time that he was a 'sweet man,' and I thought that was exactly right."

Mayor Martin Walsh hailed Mr. Cutler, who was the driving force behind the renovation of Emerson College's Cutler Majestic Theatre, among other cultural advancements he supported across the city, as a "true philanthropic leader," and offered that "the lights will be a bit dimmer on the Commonwealth Avenue Mall with his passing."

In his remarks, the benefactor/honoree looked back to his boyhood days. "My grandfather owned a store at the corner of Harvard Street and Glenway Street, and I used to walk across to him for lunch every day," he recalled. "He even taught me Yiddish. At home, my mother and father only spoke English in front of me, and when they wanted to talk privately they spoke Yiddish. They didn't know that I understood them because I learned it from my grandfather."

Mr. Cutler posed for pictures at the event, which was wrapped in nostalgia, and he smiled as the kindergarten teacher led 20 little children in to their brand new book room — the Ted Cutler Library. And as he gazed at them, the 4 and 5 year olds sat down on the newly carpeted floor, ready to hear their first story read to them from a book on a shelf in the new library. It was their very first story-telling session, and the story was told not in English, not in Yiddish, but in Spanish.

Mentoring works; support the state grants

To the Editor:

As the state budget season shifts into high gear, legislators on Beacon Hill are grappling with many competing priorities, including decisions on funding for initiatives that support young people. With the uncertainty surrounding the outcome of the federal budget and its effects on Massachusetts, it's critical when resources are limited that we focus on initiatives that offer proven results.

Mentoring works. It brings caring adults into the lives of young people and gives them the support they need to reach their full potential. A study published by Wilder Research shows that for every dollar invested in effective mentoring programs, there is a return of $2.72. That comes from projected increases in lifetime earnings by giving at-risk youth a guiding hand and view to opportunities. It means they are less likely to engage in risky behaviors. This is especially important as state leaders confront the growing problem of opioid abuse. Young people in these relationships are more likely to stay in school, more ready for the workforce and to engage in positive social relationships. In short, these mentoring relationships support young people and strengthen our communities.

Unfortunately, the need for these relationships remains great. Too many young people aren't finishing school, meaning they aren't fully prepared for well-paying jobs, more likely to depend on public assistance and more likely to be incarcerated.

The state Mentoring Matching Grants line item provides critical funds to mentoring programs across the state to make more of these empowering youth-adult relationships possible. An investment of $750,000 in fiscal year 2018 will create and support more than 2,000 mentoring relationships across Massachusetts, including many in Boston at programs like Boston Partners in Education, Generations Inc., and many others. This request is $250,000 more than what was budgeted last year and will allow an expanded effort into the public schools to grow these relationships with "graduation coaches" who support young people in danger of dropping out of school. The $750,000 request represents just a fraction of a state budget that approaches $40 billion annually. What's more, there is a dollar-for-dollar match requirement for mentoring programs receiving funds, meaning private sector dollars will double the impact of this investment.

As leaders in the public and private sector and as board members for Mass Mentoring Partnership, which administers the Mentoring Matching Grants, we know how important an increase is this year. Representative Liz Malia has been a longtime supporter of this line item in the past and we are urging her to support the increased funding this year to make more of these relationships happen north of Boston and across the state.

Please take a moment to contact Representative Malia and other legislators to let them know that you support the Mentoring Matching Grants line item as a proven strategy to connect young people with caring adults and strengthen communities across our state.

Mr. Mayor, act on plastic bag ban now

To the Editor:

We have sent the following letter to Mayor Walsh:

Our names are Calida Beliveau, Clare Ablett, and Eleanor Pelletier, and just like you, we are Originally From Dorchester and love growing up in our neighborhood. As your neighbors, we would like to bring to your attention to how devastating plastic bags are to Boston.

We have been working on the proposal to ban plastic bags with friends and neighbors for over a year and were disappointed to hear that you did not support the bag ban law that was proposed in the City Council. We understand that you want to include this in a larger plan for the city, but we cannot wait any longer: Boston is ready now!

Cities and countries around the world from Cambridge to Cork to Cameroon have banned single use plastic bags. Boston is supposed to be this shining star and a world class city and yet, we are falling behind. Right now our star on the map is covered with plastic bags. If you walk around the city, you'll see plastic bags everywhere: on the sidewalks, trees, bushes, beaches, in the sewers, storm drains, rivers, and waterways. They are all over our neighborhoods. It's disgusting!

One thing that is very clear is that once a plastic bag is made, it never really goes away. If it goes in the trash, it just sits in a landfill that the city pays for. If someone tries to recycle it, it blocks the recycling machines and the workers get hurt trying to pull them out. It seems like it is all negative for us and the only people who are winning are the plastic bag makers.

We are a port city with a rich history that should be protected. Our fisheries and aquatic life need to be kept safe from plastics that can get into our seafood and kill wildlife. Tourists who come to the city could be given a Boston reusable bag while they visit, and then bring it home and use it with pride. We can be known as a leader in protecting the planet.

Please support the bag ban that Councilors O'Malley and Michelle Wu have created. If you need more information, we would love to meet with you and talk more about all that we have learned about this important issue. As kids, we will inherit this city and this planet; don't let us down. Thank you.

Sincerely,
Calida Beliveau (11), Clare Ablett (11), and Eleanor Pelletier (10)

Race disparities remain as teen birth rate drops across state

By COLIN A. YOUNG
STATE HOUSE
NEWS SERVICE

Massachusetts mothers gave birth to 71,484 children in 2015, and while the teen birth rate and other public health indicators are trending positively the Department of Public Health warned in a report released last week that racial disparities remain.

The 71,484 births represented a 0.5 percent decline from 2014 and a 22.7 percent decline in the number of births since 1990, according to the DPH report. Massachusetts mothers also continue to get older - the number of births to women under the age of 30 declined by 3.2 percent while the number of births to women 30 or older increased 1.4 percent, the report said.

For the fifth year in a row the teen birth rate in Massachusetts declined to its lowest recorded level -- 9.4 births per every 1,000 women ages 15 through 19, according to DPH. In 2011 the teen birth rate was 15.4, and the 2015 data represents a 39 percent decline in teen births between 2011 and 2015.

"While this is a significant decrease in a five year time period, disparities remain, with Hispanic teen birth rate more than seven times that of white non-Hispanic teens," DPH wrote in the report.

According to DPH, white non-Hispanic mothers gave birth to 718 babies in 2015, for a birth rate of 4.5 births per 1,000 women ages 15 through 19. Black non-Hispanic mothers gave birth to 286 children in 2015, for a teen birth rate of 14.4 births per 1,000 women ages 15 through 19. And Hispanic women ages 15 through 19 gave birth to 1,044 children in 2015, for a teen birth rate of 32.7 births per 1,000 women.

A racial disparity also exists with the adequacy of prenatal care. DPH's report found the percentage of black non-Hispanic mothers who had adequate prenatal care decreased in 2015 to 69.3 percent, the lowest level in 20 years.

The percentage of white non-Hispanic women who received adequate prenatal care was 85.1 percent, 82.8 percent for Asian mothers, and 77.6 percent for Hispanic women, according to DPH.

The percentage of women who self-reported that they smoked during their pregnancy declined in 2015, from 6.4 percent of women in 2014 to 5.5 percent in 2015, and DPH noted that smoking during pregnancy was "disproportionately higher" among white non-Hispanic mothers.

CITATION GIVING NOTICE OF CONSERVATOR'S ACCOUNT Docket No. SU15P2344PM IN THE MATTER OF MARY KATHLEEN DEVINE of BOSTON, MA
Protected Person/ Disabled Person/ Respondent

To the named Respondent and all other interested persons, you are hereby notified pursuant to Rule 72 of the Supplemental Rules of the Probate & Family Court, that the annual account(s) of Joseph D. Sommer Esq. of Boston, MA as Conservator of the property of said Respondent has or have been presented to the Court for allowance.

You have the right to object to the account(s). If you wish to do so, you or your attorney must file a written appearance at this court on or before 10:00 A.M. on the return date of 04/27/2017. This day is NOT a hearing date, but a deadline date by which you have to file the written appearance if you object to the account(s). If you fail to file the written appearance and objection by the return date, action may be taken in this matter without further notice to you, including the allowance of the account(s). Additionally, within thirty days after said return date (or within such other time as the Court upon motion may order), you must file a written affidavit of objections stating the specific facts and grounds upon which each objection is based and a copy shall be served upon the Conservator pursuant to Rule 3 of the Supplemental Rules of the Probate & Family Court.

You have the right to send to the Conservator, by registered or certified mail, a written request to receive a copy of the Petition and account(s) at no cost to you.

IMPORTANT NOTICE
The outcome of this proceeding may limit or completely take away the above-named person's right to make decisions about personal affairs or financial affairs or both. The above-named person has the right to ask for a lawyer. Anyone may make this request on behalf of the above-named person. If the above-named person cannot afford a lawyer, one may be appointed at State expense.

Witness, Hon. Joan P. Armstrong, First Justice of this Court.

Once again, the NCAA promotes a scam with its 'Dance'

This marks roughly the 40th consecutive year that the NCAA basketball tourney has come and gone without any acknowledgment in this space aside from the sort of disparaging remarks I'm about to spew.

The basketball may be terrific but the pretext is rotten. Because as a festival of genuine amateur sport, the annual NCAA men's extravaganza is a sham, cynically celebrating everything that's wrong with college sport. It is profoundly corrupt, rewarding most only those who cheat best.

Sports/Clark Booth

Why distinguished colleges and universities that at least try to play by the rules continue to play the role of suckers in this charade, thereby according it undeserved legitimacy by participating when they know their role is pathetic, is beyond me. Does a crummy occasional invitation to serve as cannon fodder in this thing justify bowing to the buzzards who stage and dominate it? Hard to believe an enlightened college president would actually believe that.

If the honorable schools took a stand, this entire farce would quickly crumble and its nefarious orchestrator, the National Collegiate Athletic Association, would be out of business overnight. You want terrific basketball? Watch the NBA, where the rules of the game are at least above board and abided equally by all.

The fawning of the mainstream media over this outrage is yet another scandal. It's a classic cop-out. Have we no shame? But this year, USA Today at least put a little dent in the idiotic pretenses of the nonsense by publishing the coaches' salaries at the 68 schools invited to this macabre "Dance," much, no doubt, to the embarrassment of at least 40 said academic groves.

You'll surely not be surprised to learn that two eminent scholars with strong New England roots lead this dubious parade. At Kentucky, Rick Pitino, ex of Providence and the Celtics, makes $7,789,200 a year. At Louisville, John Calipari, ex of UMass, makes $7,435,576. In third place, dripping with his customary piety, is Duke's Mike Krzyzewski at $5,550,475. Might you wonder how the English Departments of these schools tolerate such true madness?

On the other hand both Pitino and Calipari have flopped again, booted early and ingloriously. So there is some justice left, I guess!

Bruins are doing something special.

It's too early to get carried away and not even official as this is written. But the stunning and impassioned surge that lifted the Bruins from the brink of humiliation to a bit of redemption in a mere week leaves one a tad breathless. It's a hard team to figure, but, then, the game itself has lately changed so much, it's harder than ever to handicap.

Having pretty much counted them out a half dozen times this season, I'll not mess with guessing how long they can swim with the Big Boys in the post-season. At the moment – the playoffs within grasp with only three games left – it's enough to greet with pleasure the possibilities of a first-round joust, and if it's to be with Claude Julien's Canadiens, wouldn't that be dandy, whatever the result.

In the meantime, the Bruins' desperate and rather gallant surge to the wire wins them at least some relief from the carping of we critics while restoring some dignity to this proud outfit, which had been lagging. And that, for the moment, may be enough.

Lastly, we have history of a sort being made with the UConn women's basketball dynasty being shockingly shuttered by little old Mississippi State in the semi-finals of the more genuine women's national championship tourney. Had it been a lightning bolt that finally toppled them, it couldn't have been more dramatic. Nor has what they've done ever been quite surpassed in the turgid annals of college sport.

Being undefeated in anything for 111 straight contests over 865 days covering three seasons at your art form's highest level is sublime on its face. But with eminence in amateur sport cheapened by the cheating that's rampant and the cheap behavior equally endemic, what makes the achievements of the UConn ladies so special is the fact they've stayed above all that.

Much of the credit goes to Coach Geno Auriemma. He can be something of a puzzle, and his tendency to allow his kids to run up the score against pathetically out-matched opponents can be infuriating, but on the issues that really count, Auriemma has done a superb job. He has been at it now a full generation, and there have been no scandals, violations, or ethical lapses of note.

His players know how to behave on and off the court, and there's little doubt about where the inspiration and absolute insistence on all that comes from. His players attend classes, function as students – and they graduate! He's had 100 percent graduation rates on teams that have ruled the land in the game they play. Remarkable!

But if none of that can be taken away from UConn, there remains painful irony for them to now ponder as well. When they met Mississippi State in the same tournament just a year ago, they won by an astonishing 60 points. It was an insult the Lady Bulldogs now declare festered with them the entire year, driving them in the end to their historic moment.

So much for running up the score!

Jessie Cuddy

Jessie was born and raised in Dorchester and operated a business in Lower Mills. After graduating from Boston Business School, where she studied business and contract law, Jessie learned the ropes as a young real estate agent working under her mentor, Jack Conway. Over the years, her sales expertise, marketing skills and professionalism earned her ReMax's prestigious Hall of Fame Award and placed her among the top 5 percent producers in her field. For Jessie, real estate wasn't just a job, it was an opportunity to help people find their perfect home. In 2009 Jessie established Boston Bayside Properties and with her business partner, James Harrison, continued to take an active role in the community, as members of the Lower Mills Merchants Association. For the past thirty years, Jessie was an active member of the Church of Scientology. She volunteered her time in several of the Church's social betterment activities including: The Association for Better Living and Education, The Way to Happiness Foundation and the Foundation for a Drug Free World. She participated annually in Boston's NATIONAL NIGHT OUT, working in conjunction with the Boston Police Department to educate children about the dangers of drugs and drug abuse. Among Jessie's favorite moments were those spent in Dorchester Park with her beloved Golden Retriever, Ben. Jessie is survived by her brother, Paul Cuddy; her sister-in-law, Anne Cuddy; two nieces, Melissa Sweeney and Amanda Cuddy; her Goddaughter, Reese Adeline Harrison and many close friends. A celebration of her life will be held at Ester Restaurant, 2261 Dorchester Ave, Dorchester Center, MA 02124 on Tues., April 11th from 12 to 4 p.m. The memorial service will begin at noon followed by a reception. Donations may be made to: The Dorchester Park Association PO Box #240081 Dorchester, MA 02124-0081.
